

KILLED BY A POLICEMAN.

SONG WRITER THORNTON'S BROTHER
SHOT IN THE STREET.

When Arrested with His Brother John for Highway Robbery, the Police May Have Shot the Brother's Brother and Attacked Him—His Wife Saw Him Shot.

Thomas F. Thornton, brother of James Thornton, a song writer and concert hall singer, was shot dead early yesterday morning by a policeman William J. Allingham of the West Twentieth street station. The shooting occurred on West Twenty-fifth street, between Seventh and Eighth avenues. There are three versions of the shooting, two given by the dead man's brother and his comrade, who saw him killed, and the police story, which is probably the correct one.

According to his version, Policeman Allingham, when on post in Eighth avenue, north of Twenty-fifth street, at 2 o'clock, heard some one shouting for help. Allingham ran to the corner of Twenty-fifth and Eighth avenues, where he saw three men struggling on the south side of the street in the center of the block. As he started toward the men one of them fell, or was knocked down. The other two men ran west into the arms of the policeman. He grabbed both of them and pulled them back to the third man who was prostrate on the sidewalk. His face was covered with blood, and there was a lump on one side of his head.

"Did these men do anything to you?" asked Policeman Allingham, as he pushed the two prisoners in front of him so that the prostrate man could see them.

"Yes, they did," was the reply. "They tried to rob me."

"Get up on your feet, then, and come to the station and make a complaint," said Allingham, turning his two prisoners toward Eighth avenue.

Allingham walked between the two men he had nabbed. He had a grip on each man's arm, and his night stick was under his right arm. When the three were in front of 240 West Twenty-fifth street, a few feet from the spot where the blood had been taken, Thomas Thornton, who was nearest the curbstone, stopped suddenly and said to his brother, John, who was on the other side of the policeman:

"Let's take a chance."

They both began to struggle to free themselves, and Thomas Thornton wrenched himself loose. As he did so he grasped Allingham's arm and pulled it toward him. He then jumped in front of Policeman Allingham, who backed a step, dragging John Thornton with him.

"Give me back my club," he said to Tom Thornton.

With the night stick uplifted Thornton advanced toward the policeman, who stepped back. Allingham, with his free right hand, pulled his revolver. He pointed it at Thomas, who laughed and said:

"To hell with you gun."

Thornton was close to the policeman and his struggling prisoner by this time. He still held his club uplifted. He attempted to bring it down on the policeman's head. Allingham, who was now on the ground, fell on his face. The noise of the shot brought the residents of the street to the window. John Thornton, who was now a prisoner, ran up the street. He was followed by a policeman and one of them fired a woman rushed across the street. She knelt beside the wounded man and opened his waistcoat. A small stream of blood trickled down his shirt front from the wound.

"Speak to me, Tom; speak to me," pleaded the woman as she passionately kissed and hugged the woman as a policeman dragged her away.

"You've killed my Tom, you've killed him," she wailed.

An ambulance arrived a moment later and Thornton was placed in it. His body was carried to the West Twentieth street station house. John Thornton had previously been taken to the station house on the complaint of the man the brother attacked, who was Elias A. Walcott, a cabinet-maker, 28 years old, of 101 West Twenty-fifth street.

Some time after the dead man's body had been brought to the station house, Agnes Thornton, his common-law wife, appeared there and asked to be permitted to see her husband. She was told that she was not permitted to see him. She then went to the West Twentieth street station house, where there is a matron. She told the matron that her husband had been shot and that she wanted to see him. She was told that she was not permitted to see him.

After Policeman Allingham had made his report of the shooting, he was suspended pending an investigation as to whether the killing of Thornton was justified. Coroner Dubois then directed that a viewing of Thornton's body be granted a permit for its removal to the morgue. He paroled Allingham in Captain's uniform, and then went to the station house to see the dead man's brother. He refused to see him.

Mrs. Thornton, after giving her pedigree at the West Twentieth street station house, where there is a matron, she told Coroner Dubois that her husband had been shot and that she wanted to see him. She was told that she was not permitted to see him.

When the matron was informed of the killing of her husband and that she was a witness to the shooting, she was told that she was not permitted to see him. She was told that she was not permitted to see him.

Mrs. Thornton, 31 years old, of 209 Seventh avenue, who told the police that she witnessed the shooting, was sent to the House of Detention as a witness.

Mrs. Thornton talked to a Sun reporter after she had been locked up in the court prison, and repeated the story she told to Coroner Dubois. John Thornton, when seen in his cell, said he was innocent of the charge of robbery on which he was held. He said that while he was walking on the corner of Eighth avenue and Twenty-fifth street, he was followed by a policeman and a man named Melander. When he ran up to separate the men Allingham came up, and, grabbing him, shot him while he was running. He was then taken to the station house, where he was held.

James Thornton, who was holding an engagement at the Park Theatre, Boston, was notified that his brother had been shot. He is expected here to take charge of the funeral. He is expected here to take charge of the funeral. He is expected here to take charge of the funeral.

KILLED BY A NEWSPAPER WAGON.

A Well-Dressed Man Whose Name Is Not Known Run Down in Sixth Avenue.

A newspaper delivery wagon was driven south on Sixth avenue, between 23d and 24th streets, at 2 o'clock yesterday morning. The wagon was so heavily laden with newspapers that the top of it lay down from side to side. The driver of the wagon urged his horse to greater speed as he neared Thirty-second street. As a well-dressed man started to cross from the southwest corner of Thirty-second and Sixth streets, the elevated train rattled overhead and for a moment drowned the noise of the street.

The man looked neither to the right nor the left, and evidently did not hear a cry of warning from the driver of the newspaper wagon. The horse knocked him down and his skull was crushed by the wheels of the heavily laden wagon.

A policeman appeared and half carried, half dragged the body of the man to the corner he had started from. He laid him on the sidewalk at the corner of Sixth and Thirty-second streets. A crowd of men and women soon surrounded him.

"I think he'll die," muttered the policeman to another policeman, as he asked him to summon an ambulance.

"Give him—him—some air," said one man.

"No, give him some air," said one of the women.

They laughed and joked about the dying man as they were being pushed and pulled up to the curb, the waiting policeman said to the surgeon:

"Yes, he's dead," said two physicians who had been working over him, and who had been attracted to the scene by the crowd.

The dead man was carried to the West Twentieth street station house. His body was examined, but the police could find nothing on it to tell who he was. He had a gold watch and a small case. The case was opened and a card was found inside. It was a card of the New York City directory.

John J. Stein, 25 years old, of 601 East Thirtieth street, the driver of the newspaper delivery wagon, was arrested and arraigned in Jefferson County Court. He is a German. He is not responsible for the unknown man's death. He declared that the man walked directly in front of him. Stein was released on $100 bail.

The ostensible basis of this fight is the maintenance of supremacy by Mr. Platt through fraudulent methods, particularly in the matter of the election of the United States Senator from New York. Mr. Platt, who is now in Albany, is the only man who can secure election to the convention who are consistent in their opposition to Mr. Platt.

AT SARATOGA AUGUST 25.

PROPOSED DATE OF THE REPUBLICAN STATE CONVENTION.

This Will Give the Miller Circus Lots of
Time to Circulate—Then the Miller Men
Can Roll and Vote Ballots with 50 to 50 "X's" On Them—Who for Governor?

Should the present intention of the leaders of the Republican State organization be carried out, the State Convention, which will meet at the Fifth Avenue Hotel a week from to-morrow, will call the State Convention for Aug. 25 at Saratoga. It may be called for a date a week earlier, but this is not considered probable. It is usual to call the State Convention early in years when presidential contests are on and to make the call on the State officers coincident with that for the national ticket.

Not since 1888 have a President and Governor been chosen at the same election. The Republican Convention was held that year on Aug. 28, on a call issued twelve days before. Warner Miller was the party's candidate for Governor then.

There are some organization Republicans who want a Convention earlier than the date proposed, in view of the threat made by Mr. Miller, William Brookfield, Lieut.-Gov. Saxton, Cornelius N. Bliss and their friends, to bolt and nominate a ticket of their own. It is not considered probable that they will do so.

Mr. Miller, Mr. Millholland, Mr. Brookfield, and the Lieutenants-Governor will have plenty of time to make their swing around the circle, and to make their swing around the circle, and to make their swing around the circle.

After the circuit, the machine leaders say, Mr. Miller and his co-workers will find that Mr. Platt will have behind him more than the 75 delegates elected to the State Convention. Mr. Platt will have behind him more than the 75 delegates elected to the State Convention.

JONES OF ARKANSAS ON HAND.

The First of the Miller Leaders Arrives in Chicago for the Fight.

CHICAGO, June 28.—Senator James K. Jones of Arkansas arrived in Chicago to-day. He comes early to attend the meeting of the National Republican Convention called for Tuesday next and is the first of that committee to reach the city.

Senator Harris of Tennessee, Secretary Towler of Missouri, and others are expected early in the morning.

Mr. Jones said to-night that the committee to exclude David C. Miller from the Convention, which he had been elected to, before the opening of the Convention.

"The outlook is very encouraging for the free-silver people," he said, "and we are certain of success. But the gold element is well organized, and we wish to be similarly fixed to meet them."

We also wish to be prepared to look after the appointment of committees and one that we get a fair show in that direction.

I have read that Chairman Harris expects to exclude David C. Miller from the Convention. I doubt that Mr. Harris has made such a statement, but if he has, we wish to know it. I do not think that we will attempt to exclude David C. Miller from the Convention.
